

Yep, I've had plastic

It's not hush-hush in Hollywood anymore! Stars are owning up to the nips and tucks behind their A-list looks

Is there truth serum in Hollywood's tap water? After years of keeping their plastic surgery a dirty little secret, stars are coming clean about going under the knife! Even radio shock-jock Howard Stern, 52, broke the taboo on his Jan. 17 Sirius satellite radio show when he fessed up to having a nose job and liposuction under his chin. Why all the revelations? "Plastic surgery isn't such a big deal anymore — it's very mainstream," says LA-based celeb image consultant Daniel DiCriscio. "And the public is too smart and too educated to be fooled. It's better for the stars to confess now than be thought of as a liar in the long run."

A LITTLE WRINKLE IN HER BROW!

Marcia crossed out the lines

So what did Marcia Cross, 43, do when she overheard shoppers in an LA store wondering about her line-free face? She admitted to Botox! According to an insider, Marcia marched up to them and said, "Yes, I use it on occasion, and I would recommend that some of you do, too!" Michigan-based plastic surgeon Dr. Anthony Youn says it looks as if Marcia has indeed had Botox (around $500 a pop) in her forehead, brows and crow's-feet.

The telltale sign of Marcia's Botox? The inner corner of her brow is lower than her outer corner. "It's the classic arched brow of Botox," says Dr. Youn.

Does Marcia have the world's smoothest forehead?
